The Kings of Ping: The End of a Era

Did the Russians lose in pairs figure skating? Well, no, but the end of another sports era came about last Tuesday when established ping pong Gods Justin Brandstater and Serge Michaels lost their crowns to Jeff Ruggels and Lam Hoang.

Justin Brandstater was the 1995 champ along with former partner Tom Woodington. They lost in the 1996-1997 season to Serge Michaels and Allen Blyth. With Allen in Paris this year, Serge was part-nerless until he and Justin teamed up to form what most insiders were calling "The Dream Team." But Ruggels and Hoang were quietly creating their own rep as "The Little Team That Could". In the Gods round-robin playoffs last November, Brandstater/Michaels beat Ruggels/Hoang in two games, 21-14, 21-15. That was November.

Last Tuesday, the air was thick with excitement on Southside's 2nd floor concourse. During warmups

Serge was having fun showing the crowd some wacky moves, like a serve that was dubbed "the Serge-imodo." Ruggels and Hoang were more focused, and early on asked their opponents to "cut it out." Soon it was all business as Serge conferred between shots with Justin behind his paddle. Lam showed his trademark slam early and often. Before the crowd could catch its breath Ruggels/Hoang had taken the first in a best-of-five, 21-19. However, the former champs were undaunted. They came back and won game two, 21-17. In game three, Hoang showed flash and Ruggels showed substance, taking it 21-15. They also jumped out early in game four, and the former Kings of Ping began to look a little nervous.

Ruggels and Hoang never let up and took the final game 21-15. The new champs seemed almost as surprised as the crowd. With the fine skills this team displayed, you can bet they'll be around along time. However, you can also bet you haven't heard the names Brandstater, Michaels, Woodington, or Blyth for the last time either. The 1998-99 season will start in the fall!

To cap off a fabulous ping pong season, we'll have a special happy hour on St. Ping Pong's, oops, I mean St. Patrick's Day. Come to Southside on Tuesday, March 17th, for beer, snacks, and entertainment when Ruggels/Hoang battle Michael Eisner and Peter Schneider.
